Blueprint For Reducing Recidivism in Montgomery County

“Note To Victims”
Reentry Process

• Transition from prisons or jails back to the community - 650,000 individuals are released from state and federal prisons annually

• Number of offenders and the likelihood of reoffending have made reentry a priority

• Breaking the cycle of reoffending and re-incarceration has many important implications for public safety and policy
Transformational Steps

- Preparing for the reentry process
- Seeking out positive pro-social support to connect with resources
- Planning for the release and community reintegration experience
- Developing successful strategies and routines
- Identifying immediate barriers upon and beyond release
- Reinforcing accomplishments achieved before, during and after incarceration
- Developing new personal and networking relationships
- Tracking personal progress
Returning Citizens are encouraged to tell the truth about criminal records

The Montgomery County Office of Ex-Offender Reentry collaborated with the Substance Abuse Resources and Disability Issues (SARDI) Program in the Boonshoft School of Medicine at Wright State University and 12 community organizations that serve ex-offenders to deliver an intensive 10-week program called Advanced Cognitive Treatment Services (ACTS). Based on the evidence-based Thinking for a Change intervention, ACTS is a 300-hr cognitive-behavioral therapy program focused on cognitive restructuring, social skills development, and development of problem-solving skills. In addition, community organizations offered peer support, case management, SUD treatment, housing, child support, education and employment services.

Method
Ninety-one ex-offenders (79 men, 12 women; 46 high-risk and 45 moderate-risk for re-offending) were randomly assigned to the ACTS treatment group or a control group within a week of reentry. Before and immediately after the 10-week treatment period, the voluntary participants completed the Drug Abuse Screening Test (DAST), Satisfactory Life Scale (SWLS), Symptom Distress Scale (SDS), and the Alcohol Use Disorders Identification Test (AUDIT) before and after ACTS. ANOVAs were conducted to compare test scores for high- and moderate-risk ex-offenders in the treatment and control groups. The 10-week ACTS treatment program included:
- Thinking for a Change cognitive behavioral therapy (36 hrs)
- Victim awareness education
- HIV education and testing
- Housing, financial, and nutrition education
- Vocational training and educational counseling
- Child support and legal counseling
- Life skills education and case management
- Community service experience

Results
DAST and SDS scores were significantly reduced for ex-offenders following the ACTS treatment, compared to controls. Significant interactions indicated that high-risk ex-offenders in the ACTS group were positively affected by the intervention, compared to high-risk ex-offenders in the control group whose scores significantly worsened over time (Figures 1 and 2). Improvements in Satisfaction with Life were associated with reduced drug use (Figures 3 and 4). However, scores on the AUDIT were not different for these groups.

Conclusion
ACTS appeared to play a positive role in reducing drug abuse problems, especially for high-risk ex-offenders. Reductions in DAST scores were associated with improvements in satisfaction with life (SWLS) and symptom distress (SDS) scores and reduced recidivism rates. However, some ex-offenders appeared to have increased alcohol use as their drug use decreased. This finding will require more research in future studies.

This project was funded by a Department of Justice grant, Second Chance Act Adult Offender Reentry Demonstration Program, grant number 2011-CZ-BX-0028.
