COUNTY EMPLOYEES BREAK FUND-RAISING RECORD FOR COMBINED CHARITABLE CAMPAIGN

In totals finalized this week, Franklin County employees raised over $366,000 in 2010 for the Franklin County Combined Charitable Campaign (CCC), setting a new record for contributions. This campaign is an effort to consolidate all charitable campaigns into one, asking Franklin County employees for donations through payroll deductions or one-time gifts. Commissioner John O'Grady chaired the 2010 campaign, whose theme was 'Giving is the goal: Kick in for your community.'

There are sixteen participating federations with hundreds of member charities that employees have to choose from to support in this campaign. The member charities represent a wide range of services that make a major impact on health, human, educational, and environmental services in and around Franklin County.

Commission President Marilyn Brown will serve as the 2011 Chair for the CCC which will kick-off in September 2011. Brown was awarded the 'Public Servant of the Year' by Community Shares of Mid Ohio for her leadership during the 2007 campaign that raised over $326,000.

Commissioner Paula Brooks chaired the CCC in 2009 and set the previous record of just over $365,000 raised for the campaign. The County was awarded the 2010 'Employer Campaign of the Year' by Community Shares of Mid Ohio, and Commissioner Brooks also received the 'Public Servant of the Year.'

BANKRUPTCY LAST RESORT FOR IDAHO COUNTY

Boise County, Idaho commissioners say they had no choice but to declare Chapter 9 bankruptcy earlier this month, when faced with a court judgment that's more than half their annual budget. The county, whose operating budget is about $9.4 million, was sued last year by a development company, Oaas Laney, LLC — and lost. Last December, a federal court jury in Idaho awarded the plaintiff $4 million plus attorneys' fees, an additional $1.4 million. The county has appealed, but that does not stop the judgment.

There were six municipal bankruptcies in the United States in 2010 and about eight per year over the past 40 years. Boise County's is a first for an Idaho county in living memory, according to Dan Chadwick, executive director of the Idaho Association of Counties.

Oaas Laney sued the county claiming it violated the Fair Housing Act by placing onerous zoning conditions on a group home the company wanted to build in the rural county, population about 7,500. Despite its name, the county is not home to the capital city of Boise in neighboring Ada County, where Oaas Laney is based. County officials said it was impossible to meet their statutory obligations — "including to pay for indigent sick, roads, jails, courts, solid waste programs, and other services" — and pay the judgment.

Chadwick, who is also an attorney, has represented personal and corporate bankruptcy clients. He said there is no law in Idaho that would allow a county to levy to pay the judgment. After settlement talks broke down between the county and Oaas Laney, the company planned to immediately seize whatever cash it could from the county and Boise County's "back was against the wall." Chadwick said municipalities in Chapter 9 bankruptcy are given "wide latitude" as to what debts they satisfy and when. "The plaintiff could end up getting nothing in the deal," he said, which could be a bargaining chip. "They may come to an agreement on a settlement. Something that's affordable for the county and the county citizens," he added. "But it at least protects them from the plaintiff scooping up county cash and assets, and pretty much bankrupting the county and taking away their ability to operate."

BRICKER & ECKLER CREATES LOCAL GOVERNMENT TASK FORCE, ONLINE RESOURCE CENTER

Bricker & Eckler LLP has established an online Local Government Reform resource center to assist Ohio's counties, municipalities, townships, school districts, libraries and other public entities in navigating their options in the face of proposed local government reforms.

In the past several months, various statewide groups, including Ohio Smart Schools and the Ohio Commission on Local Government Reform and Collaboration, have called for changes to Ohio's political subdivisions to make Ohio more competitive in attracting economic development. Proposed changes range from collaboration to consolidation and regionalization, changes aimed at simplifying tax structure at the local level and decreasing bureaucracy.

The firm has formed a Local Government Reform task force to provide practical legal advice and maximize opportunities for collaboration and innovation. The task force is chaired by Rebecca Princehorn (who specializes in K-12 education, libraries and townships) and Price Finley (economic development and Columbus), and includes Kimberly Brown (annexation), Kimball Carey (K-12 education and educational service centers), William Conard (state finance, higher education), Mark Engel (state and local tax and Cincinnati), Raymond Headen (structured finance and Cleveland), Kenneth Johnson (bankruptcy), Gregory Lestini (government relations and southeast Ohio), Frank Merrill (environment), Jack Rosati (construction), Thomas Siwo (law clerk), Matt Stout (municipalities), Betsy Swift (employment) and Managing Partner Kurt Tunnell. Bricker's online resource center is available at www.bricker.com.

NACo ACTIVITIES

NACo SURVEY: RECESSION'S EFFECTS CONTINUE IN COUNTIES

Economists say the national recession is over. But local governments are still feeling the aftershocks of the economic slowdown, according to a new NACo survey released at the association's Legislative Conference. "The Recession Continues: An Economic Status Survey of Counties" highlights the continuing impact of the sluggish economy on county budgets and the actions counties are taking to cope with decreased revenues.

Among the key findings:

- Declining revenues from the state are the number one contributor to lower revenue for counties (46 percent);
- Counties used rainy-day funds (40 percent), made administrative changes and adjusted personnel to help keep their budgets balanced; and
- More than half of the counties surveyed (53 percent) have fewer county staff than they did in 2010. Seventy-one percent of counties with fewer employees lost up to 5 percent of their workforce.

Five hundred counties with elected or hired administrators from 44 states responded to the survey, conducted in early February, making it the most comprehensive in the series of seven economic surveys NACo has conducted since 2007. The largest counties had populations of 1 million or higher; the smallest, less than 100,000. The following 14 Ohio counties participated in the survey: Ashtabula, Brown, Carroll, Clark, Clermont, Delaware, Franklin, Henry, Jackson, Medina, Richland, Van Wert, Warren, and Wood.

The survey shows that counties are cutting services and employees to a greater degree, rather than the less painful budget adjustments reported in previous NACo surveys, such as delaying purchases and across-the-board budget cuts.

Consistent with earlier surveys, only a small percentage (15 percent) of counties reported increasing property tax rates, and only 2 percent have increased their local option sales tax rates to make up their shortfalls. Of responding counties, 50 percent said their states cap their ability to raise taxes, and 6 percent have county caps.

Instead, most counties have adjusted their budgets through actions such as follow (Counties were asked to indicate all actions taken):

- 47 percent have delayed purchases and repairs
- 47 percent have postponed capital investments
- 45 percent have frozen salary or pay
- 41 percent have instituted hiring freezes
- 40 percent have dipped into rainy-day funds
- 37 percent have imposed employee travel restrictions
- 31 percent have delayed construction, and
- 24 percent have laid off county workers.

Other actions by counties include scaling back employee benefits (22 percent) and offering early retirement to eligible employees (9 percent). To download a copy of the survey compiled by the NACo Research Division go to <http://www.naco.org/research/pubs/Pages/Surveys.aspx>
